

Association on Aging with Developmental Disabilities

Save The Date - Registration Coming Soon!

Monday, May 21 &
Tuesday, May 22,
2018

The Association on Aging with Developmental Disabilities (AADD) supports and serves aging adults with developmental disabilities to promote their dignity and independence.

AADD provides support to individuals, generally ages 50 years and older, with developmental disabilities. AADD's goal is to assist individuals with maintaining their independence and support them in continuing to be active members of their communities.

Visit us at:

www.agingwithdd.org

or check us out on Facebook at www.facebook.com/agingwithdd

28th Annual Aging with Developmental Disabilities Conference

Please join The Association on Aging with Developmental Disabilities (AADD) for our 28th Annual Aging with Developmental Disabilities Conference at the St. Charles Convention Center.

Sessions are designed to support caregivers and professionals in enhancing the lives of people with developmental disabilities who are aging. Keynote Speakers include Dr. Max Zubatsky of St. Louis University who will speak on how to support an aging person with DD who hoards and Drs. Joseph Piven and Laura Klinger, both from the University of North Carolina School of Medicine, who will speak on Autism and Aging. We will also offer breakout sessions on Aging and Alzheimer's Disease in Down Syndrome, Supporting Aging Parents, the Fatal Five (Plus One!), and more!

You don't want to miss this two-day event!

If you know of any staff person, family member, administrator, etc. who supports an aging person with a developmental disability, please forward this to them or call (314) 647-8100 for more information. CEUs offered.

Sponsored in part by:

IDDRC

Washington University in St. Louis

Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities Research Center